BROWN ALUMNI AT WESTERLY

Thirty Members of Class of '85 Entertained by James M. Pendleton - Rainy Morning Keeps Many Sir Knights From Newport Anniversary Celebration - Death of James M. Lewis.

To save them from their ravenous elders of the finny tribe, two large schools of little black bass, numbering about 20,000, were taken from the artificial lake in Wilcox park, Tuesday and transferred to the state hatchery at Carolina, where they will be cared for until they attain a size where they will not be sought for as food by other fishes. These little bass were two or three days old and were laken in a very fine meshed seine were taken in a very fine meshed seine lined with cheese cloth, by Charles W. Willard, chairman of the Rhode Island inland fish commission, and Frederick Hoxie, who is in charge of the state hatchery. The young bass were placed in specially prepared cans and then taken to the hatchery by automobile.

Mr. Willard being a resident of Westerly is practically given charge of the lake in so far as goes the fish contained therein. Trout were first placed in the lake and then black bass were introduced. In the course of time the trout disappeared within the voracious black bass, who seem to relish the trout almost as well as they do their own baby black bass. Then Mr. Willard placed striped perch, gold fish and sunfish in the lake and they seem to thrive without being molested by the black bass. Mr. Willard will soon add to the collection some fantailed gold fish and other attractive specimens of the fish family. Mr. Willard being a resident of Wes-

The lobster is the largest of crus-taceans, standing at the head of the marcrouran decapods, and the king of lobsterdom, the biggest ever in caplobsterdom, the biggest ever in captivity in this section, is now on exhibition in a market on West Broad street. It is a fine specimen, not an appendage missing, and weighs just skiteen pounds. It was not caught in a lobster pot as there is not one built with aperture sufficiently large for a lobster of this great size to crawl through. This particular mammoth lobster was caught in pound off Stonington Monday and was handled with care, not only for the sake of the lobster, but for the safety of the fisherman, and there is great strength therman, and there is great strength ored in the crushing power of that beter's strongest claw. termine the age of a lobster, but in the opinion of lobstermen this big fel-low's age is fixed at eleven years. The wonder is how the crustacean mam-moth escaped the alluring lobstermen for such a long period.

The rain early Tuesday morning caused many sir knights of Narragansett commandery, Knights Templar, to refrain from participating in the street parade, the festivities at Newport beach, and in the general exercises in connection with the observance of the centennial anniversary of Washington commandery, Knights Templar, of Newport. It was expected that seventy sir knights would represet Narragansett commandery, but only half that number left on the early train for Newport. The train had hardly reached Kingston when the rain stopped, the sky cleared and the sun appeared. It proved to be an ideal day for the big event and there were some disappointed sir knights in Westerly. there were some di-knights in Westerly.

James M. Pendleton, class of 1885, Brown university, entertained the members of his class who are in atmembers of his class who are in attendance at the commencement exercises in Providence, at his home in Elm street, Tuesday afternoon. The regular class reunion and election of officers is held at five year intervals, and the event of Tuesday was a sort of off-year reunion. About thirty of his college chums were most hospitably cared for by Mr. Pendleton and before taking their departure tendered a vote of thanks to their host. The visitors took a stroll through Wilcox park, inspected the Memorial library and visited the special points of inand visited the special points of in-terest in Westerly.

Judge Edward M. Burke held a regular session of the Westerly pro-bate court Tuesday afternoon, but there was not much business ready for consideration. Ira B. Crandall was appointed administrator of the estate of Sarah S. Congdon and the bond fixed

MOOSUP

Convent of All Hallows' Parish to Be Remodeled and Enlarged.

Ground was broken last week for the erection of several additions to the present convent structure connected with All Hallows Catholic church. The additions and interior changes planned will make practically a new convent will make practically a new convent building and one that will add materially to the pleasing appearance of the already fine All Hallows' property on Prospect street. The lines of the present structure will be conserved and the architect has so blended the new with the old that grace and beauty in style result. The new gables will be of the same style as the old. The plans call for a new convenithment of old. The plans call for a new conveni-chapel, a new community hall and a new kitchen and the complete changing of the present interior. An addition of 25 feet will be made to the front of the structure to provide for a chapel, an addition of 26 feet will be built to the east side to provide for a com-munity hall on the first floor, and a kitchen will extend 20 feet more to the rear, all of these additions to be two stories in height, with roof to correstories in height, with roof to correspond with the present. A laundry, set tubs, etc., will be in the basement. The convent will provide rooms for 12 Sisters, most of whom teach in the parish school.
